

book dreams.

May

New leaves, wisteria, palest ink.

Birds sang, out of season.

Nothing felt real but memory. Life was an ongoing falling toward _____ [art, abstraction, l'autre]. I wanted the shorthand of a history with someone, a language between us, vivid and brief, stories that don't need explaining.

métro / a voice in the tunnel

A young woman (earbuds, silver handbagged Pomeranian) faces the folding wall between two train cars, talks into the void.

l'autre our pasts standing with us in the kitchen l'autre the as yet unknown story of you missing parts

alors, passons

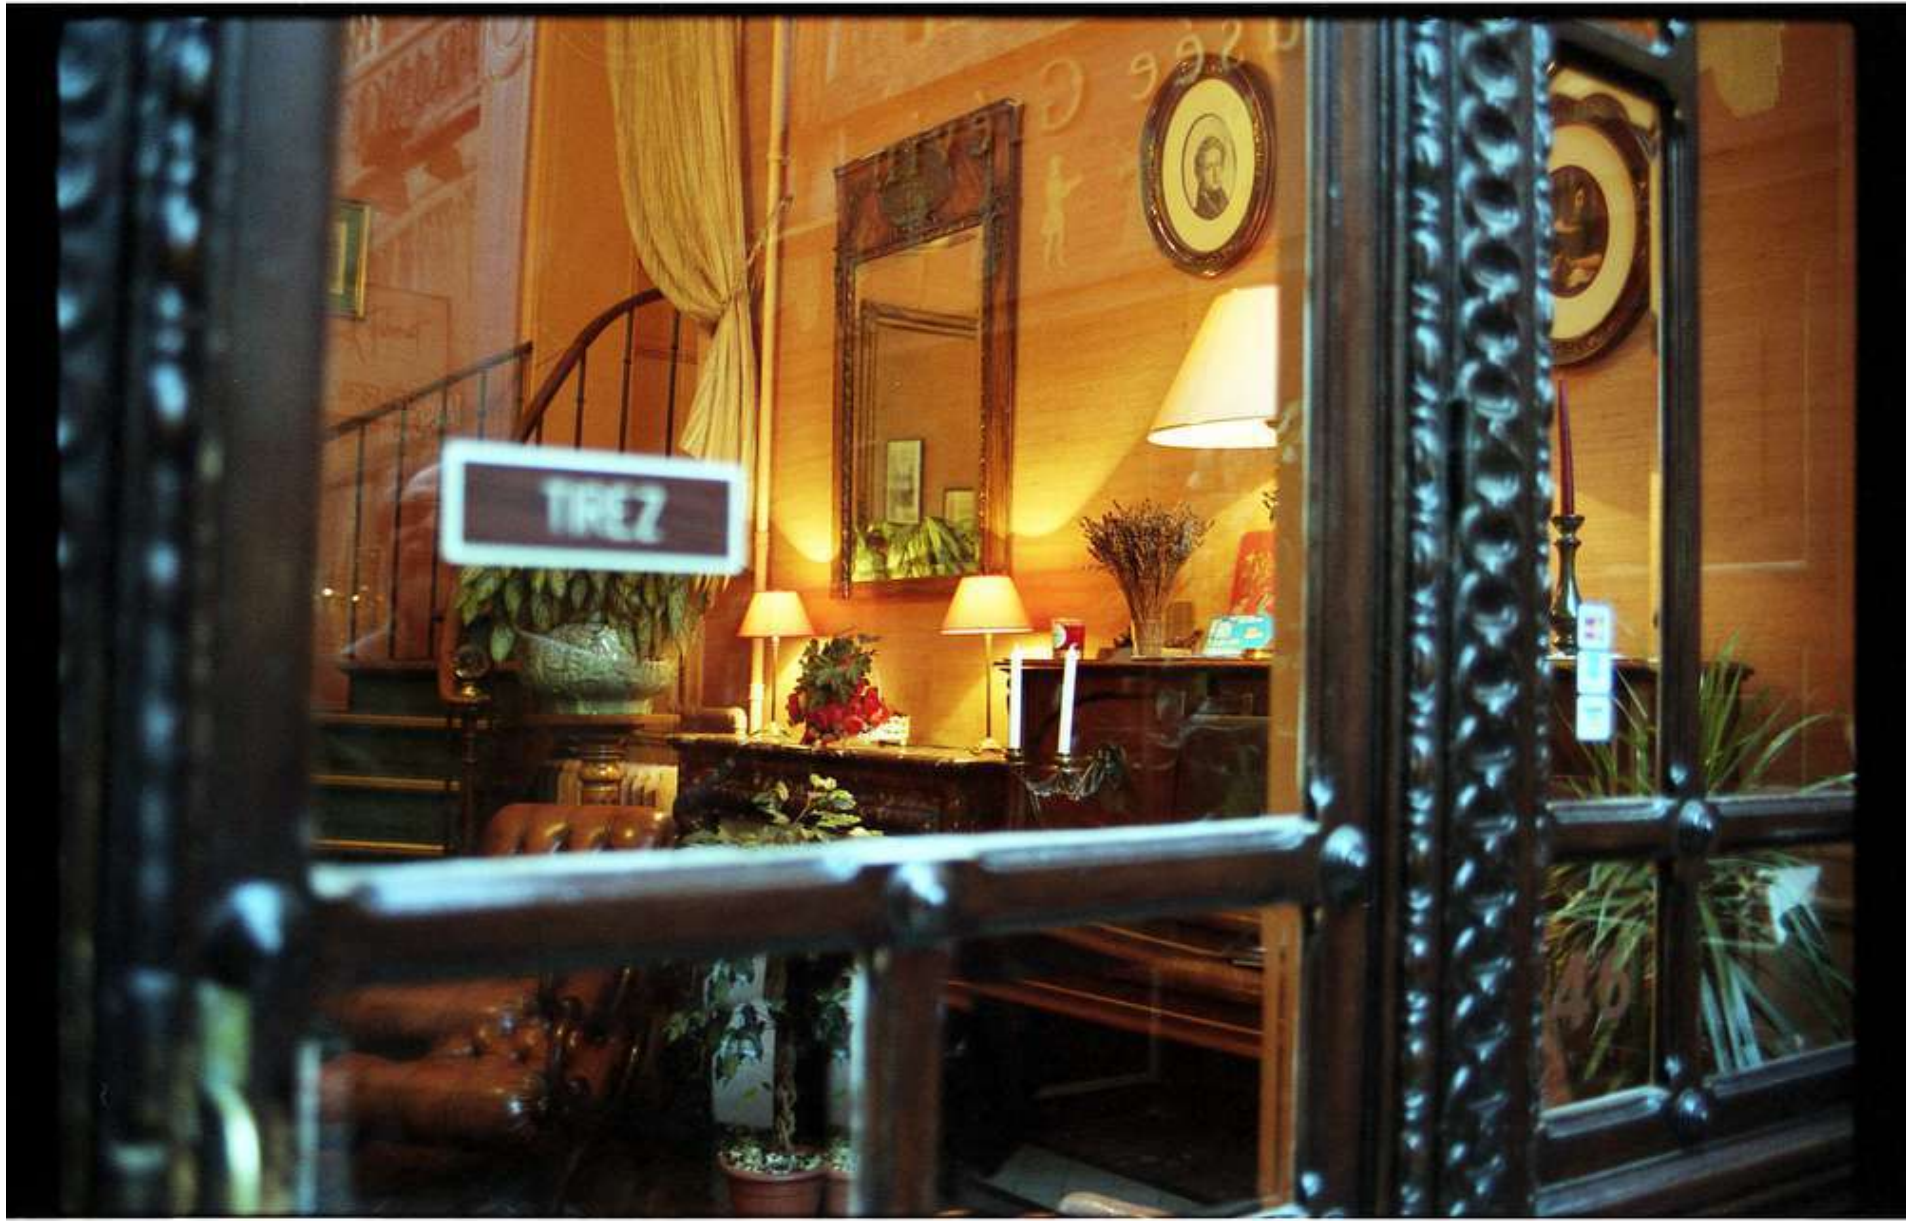

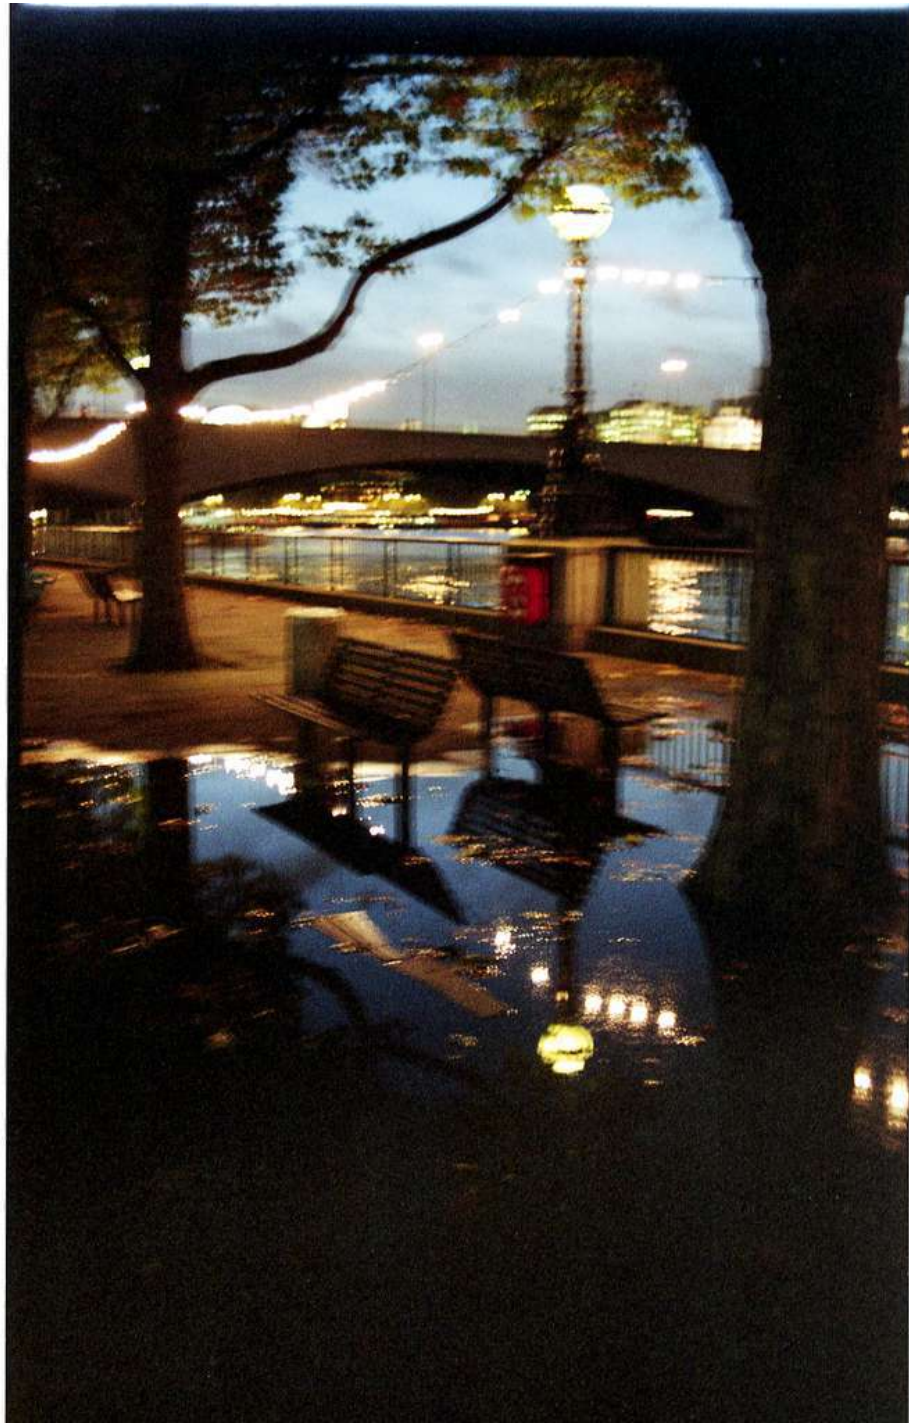

La vie se révèle par le stylo

Night

fell on the city, then dawn.

Eyes of pale silk.

Tram station. Bells. Fogged glass. Grisaille. Low sky touching chrome.

Umbrella and collar up. Tea in small ceramic pots, amen.

Bedrock and crystal, flow.

the word fortune rings with luck
and gold

i can't smell your neck through the screen so i don't know if this date is going well at all you say taste this things we can't share beyond sending an image sending a meme a shout a sigh something integral to being human our beingness the ballerino practiced at the barre in the empty student dorm the dark day was becoming a darker night the fog settled deep in the branches and huddled close to the ground like a curtain or film scores or a mirror dusk

but without any open sky fireworks of sunset the sky stayed locked shut but the lamps made a cozy cool glow I was feeling looser if not better by then because we had left the city the sirens the tin-can smell in the air we climbed the steps of the mossy green stone amphitheater a council of crones in a circle of trees the layered stage set for commencement
